

AKE AKE KIA KAHA

SIGNIFICANCE OF COVER DESIGN

By Lt. P. TAIAPA, DESIGNER OF COVER

THE figures represent Tangaroa, God of the Seas, and signify the importance of sea-power, making possible the safe passage of troops by sea.

Maori mythology and history make plain the importance of Tangaroa as far as preparation for sea voyages, fishing expeditions and war are concerned. It is said that seven generations must pass before full knowledge is completed in the student. In other words, from father to son, by repetition and practice, the caprices, moods and understanding of Tangaroa are handed down. The stars, the moon, the winds and the birds are a part of the study of the school of Tangaroa.

Sacrifice must be made to Tangaroa prior to the launching of a new canoe or the opening of a carved meetinghouse. He safeguards those who cherish his teachings, fills the nets of the fisherman and draws the food for the storehouses closer in shore thus making easier approach to the shellfish, mullet, flounders, keke, etc.

The action of the hand holding the tongue indicates the need for silence lest the enemy gain information.

The paddle and the taiaha shown in the design are the weapons of the strong man. Only those tried in their use may employ them. These represent man's progress, generosity and chieftainship, fearlessness in battle, generous and just in peace.

The words of the motto, "AKE AKE KIA KAHA"—for ever and ever be stronger in your fight—are self-explanatory.

THIS MAGAZINE

THERE are many difficulties in the way of the production of a shipboard magazine in wartime. Not least among them are the compulsory reticences, the things that cannot be said, the places that cannot be described, the photographs that cannot be published lest information be given which may disclose the route and composition of the convoy or any vital matters affecting the transport of troops by sea.

For this and for other reasons not within our control, this Magazine is necessarily an incomplete chronicle of a very memorable voyage. Nevertheless, there may be found in its pages something of the spirit of the men of the Fifth Reinforcements, Second N.Z.E.F., and something also of the variety of the units comprising the reinforcement.

It will be seen that the Fifth are a cheerful lot and not unmindful of the traditions behind them or of the task before them. As the voyage has progressed, the daily radio bulletins have told us something of the changing fortunes of war and have given plain warning that the task is close at hand. It is the hope of the men of the Fifth Reinforcements that they may give as good an account of themselves as those who have gone before them have done.

The courageous words of the Maori motto on the cover of the Magazine perhaps best express these aspirations. We hope that the significance of the design accompanying the motto will be understood. So far as the men who travelled by Transport 25 are concerned, we know that the tribute the design implies to a fine ship and her crew and indeed to all who guarded her voyaging, will not be forgotten.

The Voyage from Home

Three Stages in an Odessy

[E.H.McC.]

IT is impossible to print in this Magazine any detailed account of the voyage of Transport 25 from New Zealand to a destination which, at the time of writing, has not yet been divulged. That task, if it is ever to be undertaken, must be postponed until a time when the name of the transport, the route it followed, the ports it has touched, the dates of arrival and departure, are no longer concealed behind the veil of wartime censorship. Bereft, then, of facts which might conceivably be of military importance, the present chronicle of this voyage must fall back upon material of a different kind—impressions that are mainly personal, though they have been supplemented from the recorded impressions of two or three diarists.

The voyage may, somewhat arbitrarily, be divided into three phases, each one ending with a port of call, each one again marked by different conditions of climate and by more subtle differences of temper and outlook among the troops. The first phase, beginning from the time when we left N.Z., was a time of adaptation to a new element—the sea, to a novel place of habitation—the ship, and to that unique form of social life which comes from the combination of a military camp with the activities on board a great liner.

For all but the strong of stomach and the minority of seasoned travellers on board, the earliest impressions of the new element were, to say the least, unfavourable. "How I hate the sea," observed one of our diarists on the second day out and his mild sentiments were repeated in more trenchant language many hundreds of times as the ship drove on under a leaden sky through heavy seas. In those first uncomfortable days of queasy stomachs and lonely hearts, it was perhaps as well that temporary relief and forgetfulness could be obtained in exploring the ship. H. M. Transport 25 must, of course, remain nameless but it is giving away no secret of military significance to say that she was in peace-time a luxury liner. The conversion of the liner to the purposes of war consisted, among other things, in removing the barriers which normally divided her three classes of accommodation, so that the difficulties experienced by the peace-time tourist in mastering the ship's geography were increased three-fold. To set out from one's quarters to reach another part of the ship was at first to embark upon an obstacle race fraught with surprise and liable to end in frustration. Gradually, however, the labyrinthine ways were mastered and it became possible to go from one point to another without losing oneself in a series of cul-de-sac or bringing upon one's head the wrath of sentries and platoon sergeants. Gradually, too, an impression of the ship as a whole began to form. Luxurious in her appointments and bearing much evidence of the art of the interior decorator, she bore also upon her many signs of her new employment. Gun-racks had been placed upon landings once given over to the gossip and the rendezvous of trans-Atlantic passengers; the clacking of typewriters and the sharp inquisitions of orderly room N.C.O.'s now profaned her quiet sanctums; tiers of bunks stood gauntly and incongruously in bridal suites; rare panelling was protected from the comings and goings of a crowded soldiery. She seemed "like a pretty woman who had suddenly put on a suit of sack-cloth and stuck revolvers in her belt" to borrow a comparison from Joseph Conrad.

So Near and Yet so Far

This, then, was the ship to which we accustomed ourselves as we moved towards kindlier seas and a more genial temperature. Gradually, as the weather improved, wan figures began to appear on deck, mess rooms became more crowded and training, hitherto confined to Spartans, began in earnest. It was in this atmosphere of increased animation that one morning there loomed through the fog landmarks known to New Zealanders by repute but not to many at first hand. The two days passed within sight but not within reach of those landmarks will remain in the minds of the men of the Fifth Reinforcements as the most tantalising experience of the voyage. Leave could not be granted and little consolation could be derived from the sight of our companion ship as she moved ahead toward the wharves. "So near and yet so far" was a lament that was heard on every deck and that was entered, with variations, in so many letters and diaries. But troops do not abandon themselves to useless regrets and a substitute for the delights of shore leave was found in exchanging witticisms and confidences with the occupants of launches and dinghies brave enough or impudent enough to brave the discouragement of patrol boats and approach within hailing distance of the transport. Such diversions cloy, however, and to some at least it was a relief when we sailed again, now members of one of the greatest convoys to leave the Antipodes and farewelled by a people whose warmth and enthusiasm we were to experience at closer quarters at our next port of call.

The Troops Settle Down

The next stage of the voyage, as blank pages and brief diary entries show, was lacking in external incidents of any consequence. Land was occasionally sighted and speculated about, escorting planes were hailed, there were whales and countless rumours of whales. The weather, with only one disconcerting interlude, was mild. Comparative freedom from external distractions, however, supplied the conditions for a more intense development of shipboard life. This was the time when the decks quivered under the impact of vigorous P.T., when officers used their leisure in preparing new lectures, when sergeants-major inveigled with something of the fire and vigour of camp days. This, too, was the time when social life flourished on board ship as it could not do while sea-legs were still unstable. On the narrow strips of deck dignified by name of parade-grounds or in the crowded recreation rooms the associations of camp life were renewed and new friendships formed. Here the man from Kaitia met the man from Temuka, the merits of Auckland harbour were pitted against those of Wellington's "mere pond," south mingled with north, Maori with European and in that commingling, the Fifth Reinforcements, for the first time, began to realise itself as a unit of the Second New Zealand Expeditionary Force.

The climax to this second phase of the voyage was our arrival in the second port of call. On this occasion, the delights of a city were enjoyed, not from afar but at the closest possible quarters and for two successive days. To most of us the city of—with its ample parks, dignified streets and massive buildings was a revelation. Not less of a revelation was the hospitality of its people. The following tribute to those who provided for us two memorable days is the more striking because it was written with no thought of publication "The people of—and—have been absolutely wonderful and the organisation has been 100 per cent. The locals certainly opened their hearts to us and gave us a right royal welcome."

Sailing into Tropic Seas

So it was that with pleasureable recollections and not a few regrets we set out again on the third phase of the voyage. With startling suddenness we passed into temperatures which few of us had hitherto experienced. With increasing heat there came many modifications in shipboard life. Training went on as before but even the most zealous succumbed in some degree to the prevailing lassitude. It was found advisable to assign P.T. to the early morning hours and to increase the proportion of lectures in the daily syllabus. To become a mess orderly was to undergo ordeal by fire and the taking of meals became a literal exemplification of the Biblical injunction—"in the sweat of the brow thou shalt eat bread." Heat, combined with black-outs, thinned the crowds in the recreation rooms and permission for the men from the lower strata to sleep on deck was welcomed. But there were compensations the pleasure of taking on that envied summer tan, the delights of star spattered tropical skies, the spectacle of phosphorescent seas and of skimming flying fish. Day followed day while one almost lost count of them until at last as the climax to the tropical phase, we came in sight of white beaches fringed with coconut palms and seas of an incredible blue on which sailed craft of exotic shapes and hues. We had come in contact with tropical civilisation. !

In the days that followed we were to see tropical life in all its amazing profusion and variety. We were to acquire the arts of trade as they are known to the East, we were to taste exotic foods and spend our small substance on a variety of curios, many of dubious worth. We were, moreover, again to be grateful for the hospitality extended by men and women of our own race.

At this point the chronicle of our voyage must end upon a note of suspense. The Odyssey itself is possibly only begun nor do we know to what strange shores we shall penetrate before our task is completed and we return to our homes. By that time we shall have added much to the store of experience we have already accumulated; we shall have known pleasure, pain, hardship and possibly all the anguish of war.

Sailing the Great Sea of Kiwa again—Maoris on Ship

VIEW FROM A PORTHOLE

How many miles of sea lead back from my porthole to the Sun?
How many miles beyond that, and our journey scarce begun?

Till half the World's between us and still the salt spray flings,
Behind us and between us and the old familiar things.
We who have known ease of mind, place and circumstance,
Now we have taken ship to sail the stormy seas of chance,
Memory points the pathway back along the miles we've gone,
But cannot point the path ahead or the fate that beckons on,
We must follow our pathway to its end, into the dark unknown,
Only so shall we link the path to the things that are our own.—E. G. W.

A Stout Ship

A Tribute to Transport 25 and her Crew

THE men of the Fifth Reinforcements, Second N.Z.E.F., who travelled on Transport 25, left that fine ship with many impressions, but one of them, at least, shared by all—admiration for the unostentatious efficiency with which the men of the Merchant Navy discharge their task in wartime.

Many of the hundreds of khaki-clad figures filling every nook and cranny of the ship possibly did not realise, until they had emerged from their partially dazed state after two or three days at sea, that great liners do not run themselves. This was not entirely due to the daze but possibly more to the fact that the considerable complement of Transport 25 did their varied jobs so unobtrusively and thoroughly that they were almost unnoticed. It was only when the khaki tide ceased washing through the corridors and down the companion-ways and the troops commenced to settle down that they began really to comprehend how much was contributed to their comfort and convenience and still more to their safety by the officers and crew manning the transport.

As the voyage wore on, the men in khaki and the men in the ship's blue and white began to fraternise and in many of a quiet quarter-of-an hour on the foredeck and in other places where foregathering was permitted young New Zealanders who had never before been aboard an ocean-going liner came to learn at first-hand something of the quiet humour and salty courage of those who go down to the sea in His Majesty's ships when His Majesty is at war.

At night, while the thousands of men below decks slept, ceaseless vigil was kept above them while below them the great turbines effortlessly sent the ship upon her way. Only the grim reminder of guns mounted here and there, of regular boat drills and, most of all, the nightly blackouts, underlined the fact that this was a tremendously valuable ship carrying a tremendously valuable human cargo through waters which, in every one of their thousands of miles, might bring unexpected perils either from Nature or through enemy malice.

To the ship's crew it was all part of the day's—or the night's—work and perhaps we were all a little prone to accept it as such. Did we all realise that these were men doing a job as essential to the Empire's cause as our own or that of those other crews who manned the grey naval watchdogs guiding the convoy? Did we all of us realise what it had meant to these men to see a fine ship treated as any fine ship must be when she becomes a troopship? Did we all of us justly assess the ceaseless vigil, the unremitting watch and ward kept by these men who brought us from one side of the world to the other without deviating one hair's breadth from unruffled serenity? Perhaps we did not realise it when we came aboard but on that long voyage from home we learned to know Transport 25 for a very fine ship and her crew as worthy representatives of the men who for centuries have sailed British ships wherever there are seas to sail. Henceforth, some thousands more New Zealanders, when they read of the deeds of the Merchant Navy will find these deeds given special significance by their own experience on Transport 25.

It is the very sincere wish of the men who travelled from Down Under on Transport 25 that she may continue as she has begun, triumphantly outfacing the perils of war and that very soon they may be able to salute her by a name instead of a number. Ship and crew have added once again to the great traditions of their house-flag and the Red Ensign.

FIFTH REINFORCEMENTS

To seize the sword we drop the pen,
Secure that in the minds of men
No thought of blame we shall attain,
Who seek to build the world again.

To check the powers of force and lust—
Thrice armed who has his quarrel just—
We leave our home's unruffled calm,
That it and ours shall know no harm.

Deep in our hearts the Empire shrined,
In unity of heart and mind
Its sons in scorn of death go forth
From East and West, from South and North,

United free in thought and word.
We hear the call and take the sword.—W. A. F.

FIRST GLIMPSES OF LIFE IN THE EAST

The Haka of the Maori People

Its Revival In Recent Years

[By P. T.]

Vigorous, awe-inspiring, blood-curdling in action and voice, the Haka of the Maori of pre-Pakeha days was notable for its—ferocity, where the weak were tossed aside ruthlessly, and the brave and strong pranced, wheeled and leaped, the whilst yelling and shouting with rhythmic actions. The dance depicts revenge, defiance, victory, hospitality and rejoicing. Whatever its form, ritual or ceremonial, it did not lose its character of energy and force.

It was necessary, then, in the days when the Maori depended on the strength of his arm alone, hence the introduction of the haka prior to, in the midst and at the end of the battle, struck terror into the hearts of the enemy, accelerated the breaking point and shattered his morale. Many a victory was won before the charge was made through "The dancing of the haka" before battle.

Since the arrival of the Maori in New Zealand about 900 years ago, until the arrival of the first settlers, the haka family tradition is remarkable as the son took his father's place in the ranks generation after generation. Similarly with the leader's part, only the chiefs qualify.

The introduction of Christianity brought about the omission in the haka of the blood-thirsty element so dear to the Maori and there was a fear about the period of Queen Victoria's reign, that the haka would die out due mostly to lack of subject-matter. The majority of the race are ignorant of its significance, but what they lack in knowledge today; they make up in enthusiasm.

The period during the Boer War and the Great War brought the haka of the Maori back to its old place in the Maori heart. Subject-matter was in abundance main highways and transport by land and sea made possible more frequent inter-tribal visits and thus the haka was revived through display and competition. During these wars the haka became the medium through which the tribes bade their men "haere ra, haere ra" and similarly on their return "Haere mai, haere mai."—"A fond farewell"—"Welcome home, welcome home." Hence the haka was once more danced as of yore. Receptions to distinguished visitors, Royalties, etc., are lacking in hospitality if the haka is not danced. During the last twenty years the Maori people have concentrated on building tribal houses throughout the country—mainly for the purpose of preserving their arts and crafts, but indirectly it has stimulated all its other arts, not least the "arts of pleasure" of which the haka is the most outstanding, as weeks of preparation are essential.

The Haka Peruperu—The War Dance

THIS is the most difficult haka of the Maori, danced with a weapon in the hand. Its outstanding feature is the leaping action, and history records that in the training of an "ope tana," (fighting battalion), when in its final passing out ceremony if one of the warriors failed to maintain his cadence and height of the leaping, the omen was one of failure for venture; in other words, the action might be postponed or in the event going forth, the knowledge that one of them to act failed to qualify might demoralise the men.

With action of hands and feet, control of vocal force must be judged carefully as the words interpret the motion of the whole body. Leaping, running, crouching, reclining; with eyes rolling from side to side; tongue extended to its fullest; yells in full blast, now in hoarse voice again once more swelling out and finishing off with a crushing "Hei" the performers sit back exhausted with heaving chests and with streams of perspiration all over their bodies. It is more vigorating than the usual "P.T." both mentally and physically, because there is punch in it and great significance, for it means the destruction of enemies, the triumph of one's people and country, rest and quietness in one's old age.

The Maori has a saying and proverb. "Toa tana, mate tana, toa mahi kai ma te huhu tena." The brave warrior dies in war, the agriculturist dies of old age," which further translated means: "The warrior goes to war so that the people can till their land in peace and quietness."

"Ka mate, ka mate, ka ora, ka ora.
Ka mate, ka mate, ka ora, ka ora.

Tenci te tangata pohuruhuru
Nana nei tiki mai whakawhite te ra.
Houpane, houpane,
Houpane kaupane white te ra."

"'Tis death, 'tis death, 'tis life, 'tis life
'Tis death, 'tis death, 'tis life, 'tis life.
Here is this hairy big fellow me' lad.
'Twas he who made possible the sun to shine bright.
Yes, yes it is; yes, yes it is.
Yes surely it's right, hence the sun shines bright."

The Anzacs of the Great war
Who gazed upon your charm
Were terse and to the point, for sure,
And spake with some alarm.

They called you land of sand and sin.
Of divers other things,
Of sweaty sox and demon gin,
Their note of warning rings.

But I have yet to see your Niles.
The Blue one and the White.
You raise, I hear, some noble piles,
Your Sphinx is quite a sight.

I've still to see your blazing sand,
No sin has touched me yet.
But on this troopship, fine and grand,
We've had our share of sweat.

I've hammocked on the upper deck,
I've been down in the hold,
And many sox I've smelt, By Heck!
Let's hope your sands grow cold.

Ship's Companion-way

(An Aid to Beginners on the Transport)

ONE of the things most urgently required upon a large ship, as several hundred New Zealanders have recently discovered is an Aid to Beginners in finding their way about. The majority of them had not previously realised that a large modern liner combines all the complexities of several large hotels rolled into one and very many of them spent their first few days on ship frantically endeavouring to find their way through mazes of corridors and companion-ways. There may, for all we know, still be some of them hopelessly lost and trying to find their way to the Sun Deck in order to attend P.T. parade.

The following Aid to Beginners is contributed by a member of one of the battalion advance parties. As one of the favoured few already in occupation when the main body of the troops arrived, he was called upon, for several days, to fulfil the combined functions of a Nautical Almanac, a tourist bureau and a traffic policeman. After giving varying directions to several hundreds of lost souls, the recital appeared to him to sound something like this :

"Take the passage on the left, then first turn to the right. Proceed until you find a notice reading 'Out of Bounds to Troops.' Ignore this for you will find lots of signs like it. Just forward of this sign, take the companion-way (stairs if you prefer it), to the Sun Deck. On being told that you are not allowed there, don't lose courage. Just sneak away until the officer who accosted you has turned his back, then proceed across the Sun Deck as proposed. Be smart and soldierly in your bearing. Any outward appearance of nervousness will most certainly bring upon you another inquiring officer. On reaching the starboard side of the Sun Deck, go cautiously forward, timing your movements so that you reach a small entrance just as the sentry has moved away. Enter boldly. This will lead you through the Captain's cabin. Should he offer you a drink, refuse it and don't let him trick you into breaking the rule of not smoking in cabins. By the way, slam the Captain's door ; he likes it.

"Turn left just outside the Cabin, step over the rope carrying the sign 'Crew Only' (it's only there to baffle you) and proceed to the entry marked 'Hospital Only.' Carefully remove any badges or patches that would indicate that you belong to an infantry unit and walk into the passageway leading to the hospital. If accosted, you are either an orderly or a patient ; but keep walking. Avoid questions or all is lost. At the end of this passageway you will find a pantry. Walk in, fill a water bottle from the ice tap, then enter the ward, place the water on the table of a sleeping patient and carry on to the hospital Sun Deck. Be very careful here. Nurses, like all women, are dangerous. Speak only when spoken to and then only about the weather.

"When the opportunity presents itself, climb over the railing on the right. Here you will find yourself in No. 13 lifeboat. Don't be afraid. Help yourself to a biscuit and a piece of chocolate from the box under the second seat and then hurry on. At the first corner you will find a Vickers gun mounted for Anti-Aircraft defence. If you must play, don't fire more than half a belt or someone may cut up rough. Turn left from this gun until you reach an entrance on the left, turn right before opening the swing doors leading to the officers' lounge, seize a white coat and a tray from the bar on the left, walk straight through the lounge and out the other end. Don't forget to take the coat and the tray with you as souvenirs. They are not needed on the ship.

"Now, you are almost there. But where ? Sorry, old chap, I've forgotten where it is you want to go."

A Tribute to the Infantry

THE men who march often admire and extol the courage of the men who fly, and they are right; but the men who fly, unless they are very thoughtless, know that the heaviest burden of war, its squalor and its tediousness, is borne on the devoted shoulders of the infantryman. All other arms, even ships of war themselves, in many of their uses, are subservient to the infantry. Man must live, and walk, and sleep on the surface of the earth, and there in the few feet of soil that have been fertilized by contact with the air, he must grow his food. These are the permanent conditions, and they give the infantry its supremacy in war. A country that is conquered must be controlled and administered; a city that surrenders must be occupied. Battles can be won in the air or on the sea, and the mark of victory is this, that the patient infantry, military and civil, can then advance, to organize peace. An immense sympathy for the sufferings of the infantry, an immense admiration for their dogged perseverance in their never-ending task, is felt by all those whose business it is to assist them from the air. It would be an ill-service to the men of the air force, and a foolish ambition, to try to raise them in consideration above the heads of the men whose servants and helpers they are. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon."

—Sir Walter A. Raleigh, "The War in the Air," (1922).

Ever Hopeful

Contributor I'd like to be,
One of the lit'ry family.
But Editors are all, I see.
Quite hard and fast to rule like thee.
I offer prose, I offer verse,
But ever do you blindly curse
For whether it be long or terse.
You say my effort's worse and worse.

PETER.

DISILLUSIONMENT

I thought our Magazine should be,
The truest, truest, history,
Wherein oppressed could right their wrongs,
And comment be entirely free.
The Editors, however, frowned,
On versions of those heads uncrowned
Writ in diluted vitriol
Had, "more or less, a Red Fed sound."
My noble words they'd not engage
Such treatment burned me up with rage,
I straightway changed my policy
And now I'll write the Children's Page.

RELEVANT

I gazed upon the mighty deep,
My face tight-lipped and grim,
For mighty deep it was,
—A relevant fact, because,
You see, I cannot swim.

Links of Communication

A. S. C. and DIVVY SIGS

MORE than a quarter of a century has passed since "Allie Sloper's Cavalry" were the butt for Infantry, wit (sic). In those days of the Great War the "cavaliers" swore at, and dragged and cajoled mules through the mire of Flanders or across the sands of Egypt and Palestine, toiling under the worst possible conditions to keep up a steady and efficient supply service for the Great War troops.

They were invariably cursed for delays and lost stores and their shortcomings gave birth to the idea for the old Army song that went something like:—

*"The A.S.C. get Strawberry jam,
And our rations of Rum,
But all we poor blokes ever get
Is—Apple and Plum."*

Now, in this latest war, the A.S.C. is once more the cash-and-carry organisation of the Army. In these enlightened times the mules generally have given way to mechanised modes of transport and, where conditions are at all favourable, the supply service will be infinitely speedier and more efficient than was the case in the dark years of 1914-18 when the Allies stood out against German Imperialism.

This modern means of transport has involved specialised training and months of M/T drill and technical instruction have gone into the preparation of the 5th Reinforcements of the N.Z.A.S.C. Mental, physical and mechanical efficiency have been demanded and these qualifications have been obtained to a high degree. The result obtained is a reflection of our enthusiasm, despite the sometimes defamatory remarks known to have emanated from those guiding our destinies at Trentham and aboard ship. There have been times when we have shaken in our shoes when invited to report to the Orderly Room—

*For dirty boots, for dirty brass,
For taking leave without a pass,
For sleeping in the lecture class,
For thinking Army Law a farce.*

Varying periods of C.B. have not stilled our ardour, however, and the boys comprising this reinforcement will be ready to go into action at an early date imbued with the dogged spirit of their forebears, those mule-drivers who did a really fine job in the last war. Having run the gauntlet of military discipline and suffered for "the usual office lies" they will be found fit for the fray and they will be known for their unquenchable enthusiasm.

Save for the fact that they were generally regarded as the Glamour Boys by reason of their wire mattresses and other preferential treatment at Trentham, the Divvy Sigs. are a little-known and mysterious attachment to the A.S.C. Some rude fellows have been known to refer to them as arm-waving Morse-morons, but they have shown themselves ever ready to "play" when on shore-leave and are undoubtedly better men in every sense of the word for their voyage association with the A.S.C. At first we looked askance as these studious youths clustered around their table assimilating knowledge from a screeching machine emitting sounds of varying length, presumed to be dots and dashes. In time we learned to muffle our curses, shifting slightly further down the Promenade Deck, on which we crawl and grope when day gives way to night. The Divvy Sigs., however, don't disturb our sleep, and being links of communication like ourselves, have been keyed up to a standard of efficiency that should make them invaluable in the field.

Now, the A.S.C. are a modest lot, despite that fact that raw material assembled at Trentham early in the New Year has already shone in a baptism of beer in Maoriland and in the aqua virginiae retailed in Australian hostelries. However, they are lively, showing initiative and a keen sense of humour and there will be ample opportunities in the days to come for the A.S.C. to prove their versatility.

At all events, the A.S.C. and Divvy Sig. contingents of earlier Echelons will find their reinforcements justifiably proud of their deeds in connection with the rout of Musso's macaroni masticators in the Middle East. Eager to carry on the good work the 5th Reinforcements are champing at the bit to enter the lists with their brothers-at-arms.

OUR FIRST SHORE LEAVE

Wherever we may go, always will be close on our memories fond recollections of this city where no man is a stranger.

. . . .

"You are welcome here," was the slogan that greeted us on arrival at these shores, and no stone was left unturned to give us full measure of hospitality.

. . . .

The people of this city opened their hearts, homes and institutions to us not because they wished to perform patriotic duty, but to please us.

. . . .

On sailing away from this lovely spot, we left behind the wish, that some day soon, when we have finished this unpleasant task on hand, we shall pass this way again, not as troops, but as visitors holiday bound. Who knows?

Anzac Day at Sea

Diggers' Reunion on Transport

ANZAC Day, 1941, will long remain in the memories of the men aboard Transport 25 as a day unique in both its setting and its significance.

For the first time in our lives we celebrated Anzac Day at sea. The day was given a still deeper meaning by the fact that we ourselves were now Anzacs and an added poignancy by the fact that we were then approaching places made famous by our predecessors. No man who listened to the services or who attended the various functions could fail to be thrilled at the thought that very soon he himself might be given the opportunity to add something to the glorious pages of history commenced by the First Australian and New Zealand Army Corps.

Second N. Z. E. F. Pays Tribute to First N. Z. E. F. Part of Anzac Day Parade on Board Ship.

The day was appropriately begun, as it would be in N.Z. by a Dawn Parade attended by all ex-servicemen aboard the transport, both from the ranks of the troops and from the ship's complement. A short address was delivered by each of the Padres, followed by a lament played by the ship's pipers, a minute's silence and the sounding of the Last Post.

Later in the morning, by the use of the ship's sound system, all of the thousands of men on board were able to take part in a brief but solemn observance. The O.C. Troops, Colonel F. K. Turnbull, D.S.O., M.C., delivered the address in which he appropriately quoted the words of the poet, Binyon :

" They shall grow not old as we that are left grow old,
Age shall not weary them nor the years condemn,
At the going down of the sun and in the morning,
We will remember them. "

"I suggest to each one of you, soldiers of the Second N.Z.E.F.," said the O.C., "that on this day, when you are celebrating the deeds of your fathers and elder brothers—soldiers of the First N.Z.E.F.—and paying tribute to their deeds as well as to their memory, that you shall firmly but humbly resolve that when the time shall come for you to meet in action the common enemy of your fathers and yourselves, you will, each one of you, so conduct yourselves that not one of you will shame the day, and that your pride, your courage and your determination will enable you to add something to the already proud traditions of our race."

Colonel Turnbull emphasised that Anzac Day had been set aside in N.Z. not as a holiday but as a holy day. They could all reflect with pride upon the fact that the men they honoured had willingly faced danger and given their lives for their ideals and for love of their country.

In the evening the returned men, under the chairmanship of the O.C. Troops, held a most enjoyable and successful smoke-concert. The gathering included approximately 60 returned men who had fought in practically all theatres of war and some 30 members of the Mercantile Marine who had seen war service at sea during the last war or who had served with renowned British regiments.

It was an evening of high goodfellowship but, as all such reunions must be, tempered by the feelings which the toast "Absent Comrades" must always arouse when returned men foregather. Other toasts honoured were those of the King, the Second N.Z.E.F. and the 29th Division. Stories, reminiscences and rousing choruses, some of them of as ancient vintage as the Boer War, recalled to men gathered once again to battle against the common foe, the tradition of comradeship established twenty-five years ago and revived again to-day.

Those who attended the reunion were:

P.B.I. Writes Home

(E. G. W.)

DEAR Mother,
Owing to the censorship, I cannot possibly let slip, anything conceivably, which may assist the enemy. I therefore am constrained to say, merely that I am on my way. The fact that I am writing thus, makes my absence obvious; otherwise 'twould be unwise, even that fact to advertise. I cannot give an indication, of our final destination, nor can I say where I have been, or describe the things I've seen. I cannot recapitulate the tales, I hear when leaning o'er the rails—(Aha! I there perceive a slip, which may elude the censorship).

Our present method of progression, is a matter for discretion (although I am allowed to say, that I am now upon my way). But whether by land or air or sea, is shrouded in deep mystery, though, to relieve your apprehension, we still are in the third dimension. All this we find, or something similar, is necessary to baffle Himmler.

You remember when I left your side, I promised you I would confide, all my boyish pranks to you, regarding you as G.H.Q. But I hope you'll realise now, I can't fulfil that solemn vow. To do so would most definitely, infringe our pledge of secrecy.

But for this I could disclose, lots of things no Mother knows. How the Sergeant-major's raving, about my latest style of shaving. Of the provosts I've placated, and of all the girls I've dated, and about the Colonel's pleasure, in the locks you used to treasure. But none of this hot information can be given to the nation. All that I can really say, is that we're upon our way. Affectionately, therefore, I, subscribe myself,

Yours, P. B. I.

THE SERGEANT

(No comments upon this extract will be read by the Editor)

A SERGEANT ought to be a man carefully chosen out, and endued with valour, virtue, diligence and experience; he ought to be of reverend and grave years, thereby to draw on respect, but withal of a sound judgment: for experience without it, is but like a jewel in the bottom of the sea, which neither adorns itself nor others; he must be a cherisher of virtue and a lover of concord, for he is said to be the father of his squadron, and must therefore love them and provide for them as for his natural children."

From the Essays of Francis Markham (1565- 1627).

(“ May His Stakes Increase ”)

(Enter a very gallant and dashing Major, also a squad of Infantry, also very gallant and dashing.
N.B.—All Majors and all Infantry are gallant and dashing).

Major :

It is a most inspiring sight,
To see you all, your buttons bright,
And also I rejoice to see,
You all attending punctually,
Your gallant bearing, honest mein,
Your ears and all equipment clean,
All this, however, is known to be,
Part and parcel of the Infantry
Therefore, I'll merely trouble you,
To make a halt—thus—one, one, two.

Squad halts, salutes and recites :

Good morning, sir. Obediently,
We are paraded for P.T.
We trust, sir, you are feeling well,
Despite this most unpleasant swell.
We should be glad, sir, if you would,
Speak to the sea for its own good,
Perhaps, sir, with respect, we may,
Suggest an Order of the Day,
Pointing out that such gyrations,
Are contrary to regulations.

Major :

Most certainly I shall decree,
Such conduct as unmilitary,
And I shall issue a command,
That it be dealt with out of hand.

Squad :

We have no doubt the sea will see,
Its conduct is unmilitary.
Another matter we would mention.
Deserving orderly room attention,
Is the rude, unkindly tones,
Used by Sergeant-Major Jones,
As Infantry, we are not used,
To being constantly abused,
But, in all our dealings, we,
Strive to be most gentlemanly.

Major :

My lads, in this you are quite right,
In everything be most polite,
Rude words are for the A.S.C.
Div. Sigs. or even Artillery
But never for the Infantry.
I will not tolerate this cursin'
And will deal with Jones in person ;

Squad :

We trust, sir, that you bear no rancour,
Against the game of Crown and Anchor.

Major :

A very manly recreation !
Come, lads, is this an invitation ?
If so, we shall get round it thus,
Include it in the Syllabus.
My aim in all things is to be,
A model Major of the Infantry.
I must, therefore, now insist,
That you consider yourselves dismissed,
And never mind about saluting,
Such things are merely high falutin'—

(At this stage the Man Who Comes to Our Cabin Every Single Day arrived and bawled “ Feet on the Floor,” also the Editor pointed out that there was a limit even to his tolerance).

CONVOY

Black hulls against the sunset's fire
These seek no Islands of Desire
Their's is a sterner task to-day.
The foam of fairy seas conceals
A hundred dangers to their keels
In ocean, harbour, gulf, or bay.
They span the world in sombre grey
Alert by night, aware by day,
Not careless of their valued trust
So vulnerable to evil thrust.
Unhurried, brave, the seas they roam
That Truth and Freedom find a home
Where from the ruins of the earth
A brighter future has its birth.

OUR RECREATION ROOM

THE very mention of a Recreation Room gives one an idea of jolly little games of ping-pong, of draughts and of patience; of idle gossip and of pleasant reading—a Y.M.C.A. secretary's paradise. But this is an illusion. Our room, adjoining the Wet Canteen, is the home of the Froth-blowers, who gather there in unbelievable numbers. The pleasures of writing there are sublimated by the pleasures of drinking there. To have written a letter in our Recreation Room is a prodigious feat.

It is a busy room. It vies with a Chinese stock-exchange. Money was known to change hands freely in those very dark days when the Crown-and-anchor kings prospered, and the poker and vingt-et-un games were in vogue. Law and order in this direction, fortunately, now prevail. Still, the owners of Housie-Housie easily make themselves heard above any idle chatter. The resonance of their voices encourages the belief that they are allowed to continue in our Recreation Room as part of their training as Sergeant-Majors.

Our Recreation Room is also a music room. Vying with the barkers of the games of chance are the ship's radio and a piano. With both in action the result is a draw. The loudspeakers never give up against the local racket, but the piano is hammered along as a parade ground by all who wish to practise one-finger exercises and the scales. Our native rhythm-kings throw in their lot at night and, working up steam, they win hands down by the close of the evening.

At this juncture we have a splendid set of murals. Reclining somnambulists, perched perilously among beer mugs and other impedimenta, clutter up the window ledges and the shelves. It has been strongly suspected that the interior of the piano has been used as a last resting place on more than one occasion.

Ours is a lively Recreation Room.

Boxing

A shade temperature soaring round about the century mark failed to cool the pugilistic spirits of men of Transport 25 and a boxing tourney of considerable interest was staged. Several professionals and amateurs of note were in the ring and keen interest was taken in the appearance of Ted Oxley, Johnny Loveridge and Jack Ford. Some six or seven years back Oxley hailing from Pahiatua, held the professional light-weight championship against all comers. He was a product of Jack Crowley, now manager of Maurice Strickland. Ford held the N. Z. middle and light-heavy amateur titles and can still hand it out in good style. Loveridge has also made a handy name for himself.

Rugby

Although Central Infantry left such good footballers as Jack Finlay, Colmore-Williams, George Hart, Doug Dalton, Beau Cotterill and Co. back in Trentham Camp, the one only Jack Sullivan made the trip. One of the fastest and cleverest centres the Dominion has produced in recent years, Sullivan quickly made All Black grade and his sensational runaway try in the second test against Springboks will long be remembered.

FASHION NOTES

What the Well-Dressed Private is Wearing

M^Y dears,
I have just had the Loveliest Note from my nephew, Cuthbert, who is away with that Big Brave Reinforcement which left us so recently.

He sent me some of the Cutest Sketches showing what the well-dressed private is wearing aboard the—, but of course he couldn't tell me what he is aboard. I do think this mystery is so thrilling, don't you? It did seem to me that the well-dressed private was wearing remarkably little but Cuthbert assures me that there is so much more Freedom aboard ship and everyone always wears a Life-belt next to the skin. That will be such a comfort to us mothers, I am sure. Of course we have all had the impression of the poor dears as they looked when they marched down Queen St. so Stern and Purposeful and All Buttoned Up.

Apparently Cuthbert has been spending a great deal of his time in the Recreation Rooms which I am so glad to hear are right away from those Dreadful Wet Canteens. Cuthbert has been busy writing up his diary and has done this, he tells me, almost Exclusively in a life-belt. He tells me, too, that Shorts are all the Rage on shipboard and that scarcely anybody is now seen without them. Even the officers wear them though of course they must be so much more Restrained than the men and they almost always wear stockings. Though I do think that it must be so embarrassing to wear shorts if one has not good legs.

Cuthbert has not apparently asked any of his officers about this but no doubt he will. But he did say that all were striving for that Athletic Figure and that even the Quartermaster Sergeants were trying hard for it.

Bathing trunks are also very popularly worn in all tonings from what Cuthbert calls Ship's Shandy to Mess Room Scarlet. Apparently some ridiculous prejudice exists against wearing them through the Officers' Lounge but Cuthbert is on such good terms with his officers that I am sure he would only have to mention it. I do feel that when a boy is away from home, his best friend is his Colonel and that he should be able to talk to him about things.

Cuthbert does not mention whether he received the balaclava helmet and the nice pair of woolly gloves I knitted him for the cold nights at sea but no doubt the poor dear needed them. He mentioned somewhere that some of the men were huddled together—no doubt for warmth. He also seemed to have taken a dislike to his drill though he told me before that his officers thought he was so good at it. He says that he would very much like a change and it is surprising that the officers cannot think of something new for them to do. Cuthbert says that he may not have time to write again for some time as he is so busy writing up his Diary but when he does I will let you know.

Yours affectionately,
AUNT DAISY.

TROPICAL

Too hot to read, too hot to sleep,
Too hot to write a letter,
Too hot to catch the tabby cat
For lack of something better.

Too hot to do a thing
Why did I leave my mother?
Too hot to join the crowd and sing
Or play some game or other.

Too hot to curse the sergeant—much—
Or wish to be in heaven

Too hot to buy some coolness—such
As beers six or seven.

Too hot to work or spin a tale
Or boast of girls in Perth
This must be just the hottest gaul
On all this—earth.

Perhaps some day the heat will go
To soothe my saddened soul
But only when I'm sent below
To guard the—South Pole.
